I worked with Ken for over a year at a Digital Media company. Even though Ken and I worked in different departments, Ken was always willing to help whenever I had questions about Dev or needed something done last minute. Aside from his normal job duties, he always participated in extra activities such as volunteering for team bonding outings.

Ken was also very helpful when we had students come to our office that were interested in pursuing a career in web development. He organized a lunch and learn and took time out of his busy day to help teach young minds. This was so awesome!

Towards the end of my tenure, Ken stood out as an employee that made me feel very appreciated. He was extremely supportive.

I'm so thankful for the time I was able to work with Ken. He is hardworking, a team player and very creative.

I worked with Ken for a couple years at Digital Trends, and worked on a number of different projects with him that required close collaboration between Editorial and Dev. He's always a pleasure to work with, and often goes above and beyond when you ask him for help. Hell, most of the time you don't even have to ask -- he'll go out of his way to collaborate and lend assistance wherever he can, even if it's not strictly Dev-oriented work. He's a rare blend of creative and technical talent, and would be an asset to any kind of creative team.

As a producer, I was often left to rely on the help of teammates in order to find quick solutions. Ken was an invaluable resource in this regard, as he was always willing to help and he was clever enough to find the solution for most development issues that would arise.

I'm aware that he was the builder of an internal advertising tool at our previous mutual employer, as well, which allowed us to quickly tackle the implementation of unique ad units and custom integrations. This is a perfect example of how he is a solution oriented worker and a great member of any development team.

It is with great pleasure to write about my experience working with Ken on building a new newsletter platform and onboarding a new ESP in SendGrid. As someone who is not technically savvy, it is great to work with someone like Ken who can take my ideas and turn them into actual products. He built an easy to use, reliable and moldable newsletter building tool for me that allowed us to completely change our newsletter product. On top of that, he lead the charge in working with SendGrid to make sure that all new functionality went off without a hitch.

Ken's ability to communicate and follow up with consistent feedback makes him a great teammate. He is always willing to do what it takes to complete a task. He takes responsibility for products he builds and therefore puts in time and energy to make sure that they function to their upmost ability. I look forward to working with Ken on future projects.

Ken is a very conscientious worker with a broad knowledge of many aspects of web development. He has a good knowledge of .Net, PHP, Wordpress, CSS and Javascript along with a growing knowledge of a NodeJS / ExpressJS stack. Furthermore he is well versed in what is required to deliver a project on time and on budget.

I worked with Ken on a variety of projects while he was at Solid. He responded to a wide variety of challenging client requests and other situations with a positive attitude. I found him to be a quick learner, and an excellent collaborator and communicator. He has a broad skill set and is comfortable jumping in and working on PHP, .NET, and JavaScript projects, to name a few.

Ken was a well-liked member of the team, and the energy and positivity that he brings to the room was greatly appreciated.

There are three things about Ken Eucker that make him a singular asset to the team: passion, commitment, and communication.

Ken cares about his code; he's committed to creating stable structures that solve not only the needs of the moment, but look forward to the possibility of future revision, reuse, and repurposing down the line. He's a responsible worker, making sure that needs are well-established and met. He is also easy to collaborate and strategize with, adept at rolling with inevitable punches, and doesn't hesitate to ask for or offer help when it's needed.

Ken is the type of programmer that you can go to with a problem instead of simply a to-do list. He'll help you understand the problem, analyze various approaches to solving it, then deliver an efficient, effective solution. He's very smart and very easy to work with. Most of my projects with Ken have been with him as a remote contractor, and I'm completely comfortable with that arrangement -- he's communicative and diligent.

Ken is a self-motivated software engineer who is devoted to improving himself and the software platforms he interacts with. Along with his strong ideals, Ken has a strong grasp of software fundamentals and experience with a variety of software platforms. This is supported by his constant exploration of new and cutting edge platforms and technologies. Ken's greatest strength may be his ability to prototype new systems very quickly, finding and testing risk areas in the process.
